

Pictures of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt As All the World Has Known Him

UNCLE JOE CANNON DEEPLY AFFECTED

Representative "Uncle Joe" Cannon, who shares honors with Colonel Roosevelt in being one of the most picturesque men on the stage of American public life, was entering the Capitol when a newspaper man stopped him and told of the death of Roosevelt. "Uncle Joe" bowed his head, and there was a long pause. He was asked if the House would adjourn. "I don't know what we will do," muttered "Uncle Joe" in a quavering voice, his head still bowed. Then he hurried away into the interior of the Capitol.

FLAGS ORDERED AT HALF STAFF

All flags on postoffices, customs houses, and other Government buildings, as well as at all military camps here and abroad, were ordered at half staff today out of respect for Colonel Roosevelt. The flags will remain at half staff until after the Roosevelt funeral. At the same time the War Department consulted the Roosevelt family as to their wishes with respect to a military funeral. If this is desired, troops from New York will be furnished.
